Images of Research 2014-15 Guidelines for voting

Please vote for your top three favourites.

Images of Research is, essentially, about making research accessible. The Images of Research competition offers researchers a chance to illustrate or represent their research using a unique image, along with an abstract of (up to) 150 words describing how the image reflects their research. As a guide, a winning image would be that which:

1. Is visually appealing AND

2. Has an accompanying abstract which is well written, clearly connects with the image and ensures viewers, who know nothing about the research topic, will understand and find interest in the research presented.

So please vote for your favourite three, taking into account both the image and the abstract.

The IoR catalogue, containing the images and abstracts, is available online on the Research Support Hub, where you can also vote - see http://wp.me/p2eVC1-1Rk. You can also vote at the exhibition which will travel between campuses.
